Enter your Search Topic Information below:

A computer based method for screening job applicants to determine which candidates from the pool of applicants should be disqualified from the pool.

The method asks the candidates questions about their life history. The candidate answers the question and based on their answer, a hidden branch question is asked.

The method seeks to predict a "predefined negative outcome" for the applicant. A predefined negative outcome could be failure to complete training or a performance deficiency (i.e., the person would do poorly at the job).

Special Instructions and Other Comments:

(For fastest service, let us know the best times to contact you, in case the searcher needs further clarification on your search.)

Search terms: job screening, disqualifying job candidates, candidate filtering, screen out job applicants from a selection pool
